Massachusetts Nurses Association Honors New England School of Whole Health Education with Three Awards

The New England School of Whole Health Education, the pioneer of Whole Health Education, and a provider of holistic-inspired educational programs for consumers, healthcare workers and institutions, announced today that its Director and two members of the Advisory Board were the recipients of awards at the Massachusetts's Nurses (MNA) annual convention, in Boston, on October 6, 2004. Founder and Program Director, Georgianna Donadio, DC, MSc, PhD, was honored with the MNA Advocate of the Year Award, Chairman of the advisory board, Mary-Anne Benedict RN, MSN received the MNA Nursing Education Award and advisory board member, Elaine Carter, RN, BSN was presented with the Human Needs Service Award.

The MNA Nurse Advocate of the Year Award recognizes the contributions of an individual, who is not a nurse but has made outstanding contributions to nurses and the nursing profession. Whole health expert Georgianna Donadio, began her career as a practical nurse and was selected for this prestigious award for her almost forty years of working to advance the profession of nursing through the creation and delivery of educational programs that serve both nurses and patients. In addition, she was honored for this award because of her founding of the only nurse-focused radio in the country, Nurseradio.org and for the education of nurses locally and nationally through her frequent speaking and writing. Health Education.

Founded in 1977, The New England School of Whole Health Education is the pioneer of the current Renaissance of Relationship-Centered Care and of Whole Health Education, a model of evidence-based, relationship-centered patient health education. This model integrates the most current medical research with the wisdom of ancient spiritual teachings, a natural outlook on healing, and is centered on integrity and compassion.
