Now You Can Tune In To Hear Nurses Online

The New England School of Whole Health Education, a holistic institution in Wellesley, MA, has launched a nonprofit online radio station, <http://nurseradio.org>, featuring interviews with prominent leaders in nursing and healing.

Available free at any time, <http://nurseradio.org> can be heard anywhere there is Internet access. It was created to “celebrate the global contributions of nurses in patient care and provide a voice for today’s nurses,” according to an announcement by the school. The institution promotes the integration of medical research, disease prevention, and natural healing in a private career-training program licensed by the Massachusetts Department of Education. Among the interviewees are Carla Mariano, RN, EdD, HNC, an associate professor at New York University’s advanced holistic nurse practitioner program; Deanne Aime, RN, BNS, MPH, BRE, past president of the American Holistic Nurses Association; Deva-Marie Beck, RN, PhD, international director of the Florence Nightingale 2010 Initiative for Global Public Health; and Lea Barbato-Gaydos, RN, PhD, recipient of the National Holistic Nurse of the Year Award.
